days, members of the auto squad of shipped to this city by a gang of auto thieves in New York and New Jersey during the past six months. Already more than thirty cars have been recovered, and of this number five have been identified by their owners and claimed. Washington automobile dealers who unwittingly were the cat's paw for the gangsters will be asked to furnish the police a list of the people to whom they have sold cars. This information, it is believed, will enable the police to effect a clean-up of the stolen cars in this city. Owing to the fact that automobile shops were closed yesterday no new recoveries were reported. That the police have the upper hand in their fight with the auto thieves was expressed by detectives last night. The secret number is the main clue by which it is possible to trace the stolen automobiles. Just what this means of identification was or where it could be found on cars detectives were unwilling to state.
